#45 – The Wounded Beast

We have all marveled at how the prophecies of Revelation 13 concerning the beast are currently being fulfilled. We have witnessed the resurgence of the historical beast and how all the world wondered after the beast (Revelation 13:6).

But in addition to the sure and certain prophetic applications of this passage, is it possible that this passage it may also contain some most practical experiential applications for our own lives? Please consider the following –

When we have been wounded by the offenses of others, how do we handle your wounds? Do we display them so that all the world can wonder at us as 'wounded beasts?' Do we as victims sing the "somebody-done-me-wrong-songs?" When we have unresolved wounds in our lives, the beast inside of us can sometimes come out roaring when someone pushes a button that is still connected to our unhealed wounds.

We sometimes try to get all the mileage we can from our wounds. We nurse our wounds, we curse our wounds, we rehearse our wounds, but we cannot reverse our wounds until we bring them to Jesus. "Surely He has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows" (Isaiah 53: 4). So give them all to Jesus.

Personal wounds arising from the offenses of others provide a most fertile environment for the deceptions of the enemy to sprout and grow. The results of unresolved offenses are bitterness and unforgiveness. These traits will place us in a prison of our own making. We will enter an experience of bondage to those who have hurt us. Our unresolved wounds will literally program our lives. So bring these wounds to Jesus. He said about Himself, "I am come to heal the brokenhearted...and proclaim liberty to the captives" (Luke 4:18).

While hanging on the cross Jesus said, “Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.” When we from the heart learn to forgive others as Jesus did, he will bring us “liberty to the captives. The strongholds of our wounded hearts will no longer imprison us. And no longer will the world wonder after us as “wounded beasts” but they will wonder at the power of the slain Lamb.
